Weather Summary:

Breezy Winds Sierra Front & Central Mtns of Idaho Wed...Northern Nevada Thursday...pushing into Northeastern Utah Friday.

...Isolated dry thunderstorms over the east-central Idaho Mountains on Wednesday...

A warm and dry airmass is moving into the Great Basin as a strong high pressure dominates the weather pattern through the next 7 days. High temperatures will be near 100 degrees across the central and northern valleys. Minimum RH's will also drop into the low teens and even single digits in the south.

A low pressure trough is now moving through the Northern Rockies, bringing an increase in winds to central and eastern Idaho on Wednesday and across parts of Northern Nevada Thursday. Some gusty winds will linger over eastern Utah on Friday as the low exits to the east. High Risk Triggers have been issued for this event.

Minimal moisture associated with this low may generate isolated generally dry thunderstorms over the higher elevations of east-central Idaho on Wednesday.

Limited monsoonal, but high based moisture may also move up into the southern Great Basin by late Friday into the weekend. Otherwise the heat returns, as most areas will see temperatures 5-10 degrees above mid-July normals.

Fuels/Fire Potential:

... Fuels and Fire Behavior Advisory in effect for Utah, the Arizona Strip and Southern/Eastern/Central Nevada ...

...Fire potential is on the increase regionwide this week with hot, dry, and breezy weather returning...

The upcoming warm and dry weather will cause fire danger values to increase once again to near the 90th -97th percentile over much of the Geographic Area this week.

Hold overs from recent lightning may pop the next few days as humidities decrease and winds pick up across the north. The greatest risk of fire spread will be in the heavier fuels of the Idaho Mountains and the Sierra Front, where recent lightning and current starts could grow with the moderate winds in the short term, then with the increasing heat/dryness along with the rising Haines indices of 5-6 by weeks end.
